Alpha chart: T1 has three low-intensity simple peaks (double-headed arrow) and one broad peak at the end of the sheet (pointed-head arrow) that is the first pass peak of T2. As the range in x increases, there is a corresponding shift in the area of this peak as the point-of-zero-crossing is displaced (a variable that shows the extent of the peak). The presence of the low-intensity simple peaks as well as the broad peak at the end of the sheet is due to the retention of the organic solvent in the sample phase. During the drying, the most volatile components of the sample evaporate first and diffuse out of the sample into the solvent phase, moving the
