Iron status of lactating women in rural and urban areas of Tehran. Iron deficiency is a global public health problem, especially in low-income countries where it's the most common nutrition-related deficiency. In recent years, it has gained attention that the prevalence of iron deficiency could be high in developing countries. However, there are few data about iron status in the Iranian population. In this study, we determined the iron status of breastfeeding women in Mashhad and Tehran, Iran. A cross-sectional study was performed on a convenience sample of 477 lactating women in Mashhad and Mashhad in Tehran in 2005. Blood samples were collected for complete blood count and serum ferritin and total iron-binding capacity assays. The mean age of the participants was 27.5 years. A significantly high prevalence of iron deficiency (55.2%) was found. The prevalence of anemia and iron deficiency was 59.7 and 52.4%, respectively, in Mashhad and 77.7 and 61.4%, respectively, in Tehran. The iron status of the participants was inadequate and they were at risk of further iron-deficiency-related complications. Hence, more attention should be paid to these women. Congressmen from Alabama and South Carolina introduced the "Pyongyang Is North Korea's Number One Enemy Act" on July 31 in the wake of North Korea's latest missile tests. "If a North Korean missile fired at Hawaii or the U.S. mainland were to go off course and end up in Alaska, the result would likely be multiple fatalities. Why? Because Alaska is not a vital national interest of ours. Guam, on the other hand, is in a strategic location near our vital national interests. We must defend Guam," said Congressman Mike Rogers of Alabama. "We must defend Guam – in fact, we must defend Japan as well," he added. Referring to the most recent North Korean missile launch, which saw a missile fly over Japan before landing in the Sea of Japan, Rogers said the more a state-of-the-art missile can travel, the greater its strategic value is. "If North Korea could develop a missile capable of carrying a nuclear warhead, then it would truly be a tremendous threat to the safety and security of the United States," he said. Rogers, who owns a house in Honolulu, mentioned the lessons from Pearl Harbor and September 11, 2001, as he

Q: Easiest way to remove middle and left elements from vector What is the easiest way to remove from a vector the elements in the middle and left? In particular, if I have a vector a with N elements, how can I efficiently remove the middle N elements, and the left N elements? A: The most efficient way is the obvious way: for (unsigned $n = 0; n < N$) $V[n-N] = V[n-N+1]$; if ($n > N*2$) $V.erase(V.begin() + n-2*N, V.begin() + n-N)$; } This probably isn't what you want, however. If you want to preserve the position of each item you're removing, you should be using `std::vector` instead. The present invention is directed to a system for responding to and mediating between voice and data messages. A portion of the data message is converted into a speech message. This speech message is then combined with the data message to form a combined speech and data message. In one embodiment, the combined speech and data message is sent to a wireless communication device. There are no known systems which combine voice and data messages. For example, wireless communication devices are capable of receiving voice messages. Also, many wireless communication devices are capable of receiving text messages. Thus, a wireless communication device has a source of voice messages as well as a source of text messages. Accordingly, it would be beneficial to provide an interface system which allows a user of a wireless communication device to hear both a voice message and a data message. Also, it would be beneficial if the interface system also allows a user to read a data message. It is an object of the present invention to provide an interface system which allows a user of a wireless communication device to hear both a voice message and a data message. Also, it is an object of the invention to provide an interface system which allows a user of a wireless communication device to read a data message. These and other objects of the present invention are achieved by providing an interface system which receives a voice message and a data message, the data message comprising at least a portion of the voice message. The interface system converts the data message into a speech message. The interface system combines the speech message with the data message to form a combined speech and
