Watching the new season of “The Bachelorette” has given me flashbacks to my college years, but not for reasons you might expect. I’m seeing myself in my younger and less-confident self, sitting in a nondescript living room, thumbing through the same cookbook I read during junior year of high school. The problem was that I was beginning to question my sexiness. When I was a freshman in college, I had just met my first boyfriend. He was the first guy I had ever talked to who told me he liked me. Not only did he say he liked me, he told me I was pretty. I remember my face, flushed from lack of sleep and embarrassment, as he said it. I was far less prepared for this in college than I was in high school. In fact, I was thoroughly unprepared for the onslaught of compliments I received, some of which even seemed absurd, coming from strangers. A group of my former girlfriends somehow found out that I was taking a class in psychology, and told me 3da54e8ca3
