I have been following the following tutorial: I have recently tried to update the permissions and such so that my client app could register for an email address. During this update, I got the error 09-07 10:31:03.055: INFO/GoogleAuthUtil(11347): Provider: com.google.android.apps.gsa.auth.testclient.Scopes$Scope "gmail.com" 09-07 10:31:03.055: DEBUG/GoogleAuthUtil(11347): The following scopes are not granted: email I'm using the email scope so I do not understand why it is not working, and I am unable to log in. I have added "android.permission.GET_ACCOUNTS" and "android.permission.INTERNET" and have both of these in my Manifest. The Google Developer console says that I need to provide an email address, so that is why I changed it, not out of malice. Has anyone had any experience with using OAuth 2.0 with Google API services? A: It could be because you have the INTERNET permission granted already, and then another permission granting it again. Try doing the following: Grant INTERNET and GMAIL_COMPONENT permissions to the project. Grant the "gmail.com" scope. Go to the Android section in the Google API Console and confirm that the gmail.com scope is enabled. You should now be able to authorize the client to Gmail (and other services). If you receive the same error about missing
