Biochemical changes in normal and cancerous tissue of the upper gastrointestinal tract. Tumour tissue represents the other aspect of biochemistry in the upper gastrointestinal tract. A multitude of different enzymes may be measured in tumour tissue in order to establish its diagnosis and its biologic behaviour. However, most of these enzymes are non-specific and do not give additional information for the correct diagnosis and prognosis of tumours. There is a particular need for more specific and sensitive tumour markers in order to distinguish between the various types of tumours and to determine the different rates of tumour growth.#define MOZ_UNIFIED_BUILD #include "/vm/InterpreterCode.cpp" #ifndef PL_ARENA_CONST_ALIGN_MASK #error "vm/InterpreterCode.cpp uses PL_ARENA_CONST_ALIGN_MASK, so it cannot be built in unified mode." #undef PL_ARENA_CONST_ALIGN_MASK #endif #ifndef INITGUID #error "vm/InterpreterCode.cpp defines INITGUID, so it cannot be built in unified mode." #undef INITGUID #endif #include "vm/InterpreterCode.cpp" #ifndef PL_ARENA_CONST_ALIGN_MASK #error "vm/InterpreterCode.cpp uses PL_ARENA_CONST_ALIGN_MASK, so it cannot be built in unified mode." #undef PL_ARENA_CONST_ALIGN_MASK #endif #ifndef INITGUID #error "vm/InterpreterCode.cpp

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an information processor, an information processing system, and an information processing method that are capable of executing a plurality of applications. 2. Description of the Related Art There is a recent technique that allows a user to run different applications in a single information processor and enables execution of one application while leaving execution of another application. For example, Japanese Patent Application Laid-open No. 2007-155559 describes a technique that switches between applications by detecting whether a portable terminal has been connected to a personal computer. When the user wants to execute a plurality of applications simultaneously on an information processor, the user must operate the information processor by switching from one application to another application. If the user switches from one application to another application frequently while leaving execution of one application, the user's operation load increases and the user is less likely to be able to accomplish a task quickly. In addition, the user has to understand the operation of the information processor and change the operation. As a result, an application may fail to operate normally. Moreover, some applications may not be executable on a portable terminal. 4bc0debe42
