Security by InfinityGroup, Inc. Key Box is a key management system designed for security. Through the Key Box Endpoint, it provides a centralized place for all keys and communication to the network. It can be deployed in both Windows and Linux environments. Key Box workflow Security by InfinityGroup, Inc. Key Box provides a simple and intuitive way to secure all incoming and outgoing communications to and from the network. A distributed key management system, Key Box provides a secure communication tunnel that encrypts and authenticates all network traffic. Key Box is designed to manage all incoming and outgoing communications, and has been tested successfully in mission-critical environments. Key Box keysets Key Box is a key management system that provides IT administrators with a method to manage and manage a company's key environment. With Key Box, you can manage all incoming and outgoing network communications, and can control which network resources users have access to. Key Box deploys seamlessly, there is no need to learn a new method. And because Key Box works at the network level, IT administrators can easily manage the security of a large network. This allows IT departments to provide the security needed in today's complex, and ever-changing, networks. Key Box works by providing and managing a set of public and private keys. These keys are what are used to secure all communications within the network. A user connects to a client and provides the network access to perform its tasks. The client encrypts all communication with the keys that are included in the client's permission. Key Box security model The Key Box architecture is designed to deliver secure communications by providing a distributed key management system that secures all traffic to and from the network. A distributed key management system allows Key Box to manage each device's key so each device can securely access the network. A distributed system such as this requires each user to obtain and manage their keys. Through the Key Box portal, IT administrators can manage all the keys and permissions of the network, so they can provide a centralized and secure path for all network traffic. Key Box history Key Box, originally conceived of by Internet Security Solution Consultants (ISSSC) in 2000, is designed to provide web-based security to Microsoft Windows and Linux networks. Key Box was developed so that an IT administrator can handle all the keys that a user must have to connect to the network. Key Box was designed to ensure the network is always secure. It operates
