, Email. â□□there is nothing more exciting than building a new command in AutoCAD,â□□ he said, Â□and using a new command in Autodesk Inventor.â□□ as I set the USDX environment up. now then you can copy the full folder to your usdx env folder in (Users) ¦ (Application Data) for all users and create a shell script that sets the environmental variables as follows: [ALL USERS - Installation directory] USDXENV=C:\Program Files\Autodesk\Inventor\2015\usdx\en [ALL USERS - Application Data] USDXAPPDATA=C:\Program Files\Autodesk\Inventor\2015\usdx [USERS] #list of users USER1=user1 USER2=user2 #define the default environment for user1 and user2 USER1ENV=${USER1}ENV USER1APPDATA=${USER1}APPDATA USER2ENV=${USER2}ENV USER2APPDATA=${USER2}APPDATA [DONE] However, I didn't get it from the USDX envar folder in above step. EDIT OK, all I could get was to add this to application.ini (Autodesk specific file) ;environment variables to the interpreter . . . It's a known bug, it will be resolved in the next Autocad version. In AutoCAD 2018, the bug doesn't happen as long as you don't use any feature of the drawing tools. Once you try to draw something, the bug may occur. Actually, there was a similar problem when Autocad 2011 (until v14) was going to be released. Then it became a critical bug and It was totally solved by Autocad 2014. The bug doesn't happen on Windows 10. Why? They have created new application which can be called Automation which is going to replace all existing tools in Autocad. Also, we can say that Autocad 2017 is going to be a "next-gen" version. So, the number of features is going to be same or more than Autocad 2014. Well, in my opinion, AutoCAD 2018 won't have this bug. I believe you can be sure about this. If you find anything else, just write in here. May I ask you a question? Who has a better business insight? A: The following from the Autodesk Communities answer my question: A known bug which is going to be fixed for the next major release (Autocad 2018). This bug should be fixed in 2017. Vasorelaxing and endothelin-1-inhibiting activities of sesquiterpene lactones of Euphorbia lathyris. A new plant gummy polysaccharide (MPS) isolated from E. lathyris showed vasorelaxing activity in isolated rat aortae, although with less potency than those of known vasorelaxants such as sodium nitroprusside (SNP) or hydrocortisone. Although MPS did not inhibit endothelin (ET)-1-induced contraction of isolated rat aortae, it dose-dependently inhibited the contractile responses of ET-1 in a concentration range of 0.3 to 3 microg/ml. In contrast to SNP, MPS also inhibited the contractile responses of phenylephrine and arginine vasopressin. MPS also inhibited the contraction of rat mesenteric arterial bed induced by ET-1, phenylephrine, arginine vasopressin, and calcium ionophore A23 0cc13bf012
