Would be great to have it for any closed polls that don't allow people to vote multiple times.Google announced today that it has reached an agreement with the United States Federal Trade Commission (FTC) to settle charges of search bias regarding the results of its search engine. Google will pay a $22.5 million fine, and it will install new procedures to make sure the search engine is not favoring certain results. The penalty is the largest FTC fine ever levied against a company that operates a search engine. Google has also agreed to a number of other commitments, including developing tools that will provide users with notice of how they are being used, and only show them ads with content that is "objectively and accurately" related to their search query. Free to use "Since its founding in 1998, Google has never used deception to weed out competitors," said Google, "but we did admit in 2012 that we had manipulated our search results to demote competitors. We've always made it easy for people to opt out of our services, and today we're providing additional control over what we show them and how they are used. "Google is now giving people more direct control over their searches, and being transparent about our methods. We've also strengthened our policies and overhauled the tools people use to control their ads. We've always said that our advertising is 'free of deception and irrelevant.' And it is. It's completely free to use search, and we think that's something that's best for our users and society at large." FTC Commissioner Julie Brill called the settlement a "historic" accord. She explained that "Google is the world's largest and most important search engine, with access to users' personal information and millions of its products and services." Brill added that "the fine imposed today reflects the seriousness with which the commission views this violation of consumers'
