In the formal literature of control theory, the behavior of almost all systems with feedforward control is expressed in terms of a system's transfer function. The main example of a system with feedback is the stable systems with Lurie's second model with dual integral controller. The limit-theoretic framework used to formalize control theory for these systems is the basis for stability properties of the overall system, like input-to-state stability, which are sometimes referred to as h -stability. However, very few control systems actually use feedback
