Your party is your only hope of stopping the evil once again. 1-3: Fantasy Adventure As adventure beckons, the party knows that they must get a ring with the symbol of a dragon claw to free a mysterious creature in order to survive. Upon completion, the mysterious creature explains how a recent evil has infected the land. 1-3: The Binding As guardians of an ominous relic, the party is tasked with saving the realm. They must use the power of the relic to defeat the true enemy, a creature that has been missing from the land for centuries. 1-3: The Temple of the Dragon A massive ancient temple has been found, which seems to conceal some ancient dark secrets. A hidden faction wants the party to unlock its secrets. 1-3: The Silent Hill of the Forgotten Realms The party enters the Silent Hill of the Forgotten Realms, a 0cc13bf012

Nucleic acid materials such as DNA or RNA are useful in, for example, gene therapy, probe hybridization for gene identification or detection of genetic diseases, protein engineering and development of drug candidates, and as pharmaceuticals. Techniques for amplification, separation, purification, detection or other manipulation of nucleic acids, such as polymerase chain reaction (PCR), DNA/RNA chip analysis, RNA extraction, separation, cloning, sequencing or synthesis of nucleic acids, are routinely used as methods of genetic engineering. A number of methods have been used for extraction of nucleic acids from a sample. For example, in situ methods include the guanidinium thiocyanate-phenol-chloroform method, the electrophoresis method, and the method using binding to silica gel. A method for extracting nucleic acids has also been developed in which an organic reagent (e.g., phenol-chloroform, chloroform) and an aqueous reagent (e.g., ethanol, diethyl ether, butanol) are used to extract the nucleic acids, and the extracted nucleic acids are separated from the aqueous and organic solutions by means of electrophoresis (Uchiyama et al., Biotechniques, 6, pp. 271-276, 1989; U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,824,867 and 4,946,764). Another in situ method for extracting nucleic acids (Nagel et al., Nucleic Acid Res., 13, pp. 809-814, 1985; Fuji
