regional blood flow measurements. Acute canine colitis is a disease that may be associated with fecal incontinence and in which the colon is histologically normal. In humans, such a picture is complicated by the fact that diarrhea has occurred in parallel with massive colonic damage. In the present study, we examined the colonic blood flow during acute colonic inflammation and its relation to the severity of colitis and fecal incontinence in dogs. The colonic blood flow was continuously measured 1cdb36666d
