MEXICO CITY -- One of the most controversial aspects of last week's explosion in the Mexican city of Coatzacoalcos was a promise from public officials that they would provide more answers about what caused a deadly fertilizer plant explosion. Ten days later, the Mexican government still hasn't provided any further information about what happened at the plant. The silence from officials has been a matter of concern for people in the city, where the powerful blast blew off walls and roofs, and toppled a hospital and several houses. On Friday, several members of the Coatzacoalcos community appealed to President Enrique Pena Nieto and Foreign Minister Luis Videgaray to open up the investigation. The city's mayor, Vinicio Cerezo, said that the citizens have the right to know what happened so that they can begin to address the damage. Authorities have promised to open an investigation into the cause of the blast, but in a statement late Friday, they said that the investigation so far hasn't led to any evidence regarding a cause of the blast. The investigation will now shift to a federal lab for further analysis, they said. The statement did not directly answer questions about whether the cause of the explosion has been pinned down. "We don't know if we will find anything concrete with the investigation," Valeria Ortiz, a spokeswoman for the Coatzacoalcos mayor, said by telephone. "It will depend on the federal lab's preliminary results." She said the federal law-enforcement body, which has sent in 30 specialists, will continue conducting tests on Wednesday and Thursday. Pena Nieto promised to open an investigation immediately after the explosion. He and officials have been under pressure from the public to provide better information. The mayor of the city of Gomez Farias, a town in the same state as Coatzacoalcos, said that he was initially informed by authorities about the presence of ammonium nitrate in the plant. "After talking to the authorities, they told us that there was ammonium nitrate and ammonium nitrite, and that it was being stored illegally," David Ocampo said. "The federal government came in and took samples from the place. They took samples to a lab and the information was returned to them in a couple of hours.... "We already knew there was ammonium nitrate. It's the same (chemical) that you use for explosives," he said.
