This is a very specific question. Is it likely that the B5-D5 battle will occur on Earth at some point in the future? By "Earth" I mean the planet we all know and love. I think the first battle was a fascinating event that hinted at a great deal of backstory but I want to know if there's any chance of us seeing any more. As I said before, this question is specific, and some fans seem to think that this battle is "complete and over." I disagree as this question assumes that B5 and D5 are somehow only on Earth. Are there any more battles in the future? A: The only thing that can be said for sure is that the Devil's Spawn would have to be assembled from elements of the xenomorph, which weren't brought to Earth in the first place, and that if they do were to arise on Earth it would be the species that is the first one to evolve from the mass-produced hybrids created by humans (rather than the original xenomorph). In any case, this is never discussed in the canon as far as I can tell (in the movie, the only thing that foreshadows anything like that is Daffy's comments about what the humans are doing to a planet that has no life on it and the attack on Earth by two of the ships that have emerged from Daffy's bomb. Whether or not this is in some way significant we'll have to see as the movies progress. A: There are a few situations The B5-D5 battle was a big draw to the colony, and it's possible that others would do the same. An attack to rebuild ships. Just for the kicks, the battle itself could happen again. Given that the first encounter happened, there's always a chance that the Colonial Fleet could choose to destroy the colony, or even build the ships again to seek revenge (depending on how the B5 ship was created, they could be destroyable if the aliens have a complete understanding of them, or even send a regular ship to the planet). We've seen the method for creating ships happen in "The Occupation", so the fleet could
