Looking ahead to FIFA 20, we asked the team to look back at the milestones of the journey so far, and what's next. Sparta's journey We were beginning to work on the FIFA 20 Road to Glory when we started thinking about what a good legacy for the game would be. We noticed that in our matches, players had become much more reactive. They were able to dodge, break the ball and execute passes more efficiently. We felt like this was a great change, as it made the game more visually pleasing and the flow of the matches better. Other than these changes, we also noticed that due to the improvements in the responsiveness of the players, their movement was becoming a lot more dynamic, and it added some additional difficulty to playing the game. For example, players were becoming harder to tackle. The team felt that this was a fantastic first step into the future of the game, and we were really excited about some of the things that we had planned. We knew that, just because we were making more dynamic moves possible with more responsive players, it wasn't enough to make the experience more enjoyable. We still wanted to do a lot more to improve the overall quality of play. We needed to make more things possible on a technical level, like a more realistic ball physics model. It was important to give the game a realistic feel. We also felt like we needed to make the game more playable. The physicality of the players is what makes the game enjoyable, but the characters in the story mode weren't as reactive as they should have been. So, even though we were creating an overall better experience, we still felt like there was a lot more work that could be done to give players the best FIFA experience. This was the start of our journey to the Legacy in-game experience. Our vision When we started talking about the legacy of the series, it became clear that we were looking for a way to create an in-game experience that would allow us to create the ultimate version of FIFA. We knew that this would be an ambitious project, but we really wanted to create something that would last. And we knew that the only way we could deliver it would be to involve as many people as possible. When we started to talk about this, we realized that we were really on the right path. We thought that there were so

Features Key:

- A deeper and more immersive soccer experience, bringing the thrill of this beautiful game to the next level: Automatically-generated physical player attributes and behavioural traits, with or without the assistance of Man-Machine Interfacing (MI), and with hundreds of new animations, players now feel more human, lifelike and reactive.
- Driven by six years of innovation and feedback: The game engine, control systems and graphics feature 22 detailed, lifelike player models, attacking and defend a system that is smarter and creates more chances than ever before in FIFA; a physics-based defensive system that responds to new and unpredictable situations; enhanced ball physics that handle the pitch height variation and maintain natural behaviour for each ball.
- Sixteen teams: Including the best players from around the world. A new functional training mode, with the best players and a new narrative that showcases the spirit of club football, giving you the opportunity to play against one of the 16 NFL franchises, all brought to life with spectacular animations and detailed player models.
- Attacking and defending systems with positional intelligence. How an attacking team behaves is influenced by the type of player in possession, the pressure on defenders and the support offered from teammates. New attacking and defending tools allow you to fine-tune your moves and tactics. Use the coolest and most immersive attacking features including: cutting in towards the box with pinpoint timing; pressing from distance with pinpoint accuracy; overloading the pitch with precision passing and tight team movement; unlocking new kind of moves to score in mind-blowing ways; and much more.

- A new gameplay developer test centre (PDTC) allowing developers to test their gameplay ideas and iterate on them before integrating them with the game.
 - Personalised goal celebrations, including the “fake spot-kick” and explosive celebrations. Player also receives more animated emotional reactions to overcome the referee.
 - For the first time, eFootball PES allows you to use a deflated ball to play with – and you are also a cat owner. You can also choose to bring your own ball to the stadium. A new particle system also gives you a realistic touch of extra comforts.
 - FIFA 2K World Manager. Your own recreation of a real-life football club. The best three managers of the world are
