is a small lunar impact crater on the Moon's far side. It is located to the southeast of the larger crater Schröter and due south of Wargentín.

To the north-northeast is the small crater Altenstein, and farther to the east is an arc of small ridges. At the south end of this arc is the Montes-Levia Basin, where the northern ridges are traced by Montes-Levia Montes. To the northeast is the heavily cratered surface of the Mare Marginis. This crater has a worn outer ring of small hills, somewhat broken up by an outward bulge to the south. The interior floor is only approximately half the diameter of the crater rim, and the inner walls are not significantly eroded, although there is some wear. There is a central peak in the middle, and smaller ones lie along the southeast and south sides. The western edge is rough, with a long, curving ridge. Goldberg was named after Fred M. Goldberg, a celestial mechanic at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory. The name was approved by the IAU in 1979. References Category:Impact craters on the Moon

The French Antilles, later known as Guadeloupe, is a World Heritage Site. Its warm and pleasant climate, with an average temperature of 24 °C (75 °F) and very few days of wind, has made the island a popular holiday and retirement destination. Guadeloupe capital The island is known for its unspoiled nature, in spite of close links with France. It is the site of the largest sugar plantation, which extends from the airport inland to the shores of Petit Bourg. 595f342e71
