Cheat Sheet Chapter 1: Photoshop Essentials: Creating a Vector Workspace and Importing Photo Images In This Chapter Learning the basics of working in Photoshop Saving time by using the workspace features Importing digital images Photoshop is a complex program that provides many tools and functions to help you manipulate images. This chapter helps you keep track of your artwork and understanding of Photoshop, how you save your work, and how to implement various standard file-format types. Keep in mind that all of the following topics are just the basics of working in Photoshop. For more on using Photoshop, check out Chapters 2 and 3. Working with a Vector Workspace To begin working in Photoshop, you need to create a workspace. By default, Photoshop provides a workspace when you launch it. For more on launching Photoshop, see Chapter 1. At the center of your workspace is a canvas called the primary canvas. Unlike using a traditional screen, you can drag and resize the primary canvas, move it around the workspace, and just keep adding more to it. (I discuss the concept of the primary canvas in more depth in Chapter 2.) An empty workspace represents only empty, blank canvas. This aspect of Photoshop is useful when you want to start a clean project with no distractions. You can download more workspace options from the web, such as additional tools and a third canvas, called a

Note: We are not affiliated with Apple or Adobe. The Best Photoshop Elements 2020 Apps for Web Designers No web designer likes designing for the Web as it is different than designing for print media. We can create beautiful designs for print, but web design requires tools with a different set of features, including icon editing tools, color management tools and CS6 features. Here are the best Photoshop Elements 2020 apps for web designers. 1. Adobe Photoshop Elements Adobe Photoshop Elements is a popular website and graphic design software for web designers. With Adobe Photoshop Elements's vast library of image editing tools, you can edit any image, make new images or create a unique emoji's character. Adobe Photoshop Elements has been a staple of the web design community for years. Features: Edit your image, make a new one, apply many filters and effects, or create a website logo. Make change to your photographs, add filters, change the color of the image or completely remove it from the image. Adjust settings in your photo. The best part is that you can manipulate the settings while saving the file at the same time. Use the product's collection of filters or tools to create effects or change the colors of a photograph. Create or download artworks and designs. An easy tool for creating a website logo. The program's intuitive user interface makes it an easy to use. It has its share of criticism as many professional Photoshop users think it lacks many features. Pros: There's an overall positive response to the program and it's consistently rated among the best photo editing software. Cons: Some professionals have issues using the program. Many favor editing in Photoshop, especially for fine image editing. 2. Photoshop Express Adobe Photoshop Express is a web-based photo editing, editing, and sharing tool which allows users to create, edit and share digital photos from their smartphone or tablet. Features: Keep your photos in the cloud, they're safe and you can change your mind at any time. You can access your photos by mobile phone, tablet or computer. You can edit your photos right from the web interface. Upload your photos to the cloud or download them to your computer and continue editing them right from the Public-private partnerships are often used to accelerate the implementation of environmentally-friendly energy technologies such as photovoltaics. But in the U.S., private partnerships are often a barrier to having solar energy technologies on the market, as three of the top four biggest solar financing companies, Acacia Energy, Sunrun and SolarCity, are private equity-owned businesses. Private equity ownership allows them to raise funds to lower their costs and deploy larger-scale solar and wind energy. In the European Union, there is no such restriction on how companies can raise capital. According to a study by the European Renewable Energy Council (or REN21), for example, the private equity market in Europe is worth about €175 billion and has already funded around 6.5 gigawatts of solar power. “The European private equity market has been the largest source of capital investment in the sector since it began in 2008 and it is expected to grow by around 35 percent by 2020,” said Guenther Justenhoven, head of IMS Research’s Solar PV industry sector group, in a statement. The private equity market is particularly important in the solar industry because it’s so much larger in the U.S., according to the Private Equity International (or P.E.I.) report from November. For example, while the European private equity market is valued at €175 billion, it represents just 16 percent of the €1.1 trillion market in the U.S. According to P.E.I.’s findings, U.S. private equity invested $213 billion in the energy sector in 2011 — the same year that total solar energy production was $163 billion. In Europe, the total financial exposure of private equity in the energy and building industries is over €300 billion. In contrast, the P.E.I. report puts U.S. private equity’s total financial exposure to the energy and building industries at between $100 billion and $120 billion. And, as of June 30, 2012, private equity firms managed roughly €1.6 trillion in investment capital, according to Forbes.com. That’s more than twice the European total, and five times the U.S. total. So why do the figures matter? In the U.S., private equity investment creates barriers to solar. “[In] many cases, large private equity firms are working with operators to ensure that large-scale

Mesa State College is home to more than 1,900 students and has several departments that deal with the safety of the campus and its surroundings. Erin Ayland was working in a field near Mesa’s campus last year when she felt the first shake of an earthquake, followed by a second smaller tremor. She felt the tremors for just a few seconds, but she knew what had just happened. “It was surreal,” she said. “It came out of nowhere. My whole world went black. I was just standing there staring up at the sky and everything was black. I could hear people screaming.” Fired up over some new marketing material used by Mesa State’s Economic Development department, about a month before the August 24, 2011, event, Ayland was surprised when she saw the department’s press release promoting the event that took place a few days later. The press release said the Republic would be back, but the event was abruptly cancelled due to the earthquake. “It just doesn’t seem like the right way to do business,” Ayland said. “There was a lot of complaining by the students (of a marketing department that had hired them for ‘above market pay’). We saw this stuff before the earthquake. They knew there were a few things coming, and to put it out when the earthquake hit seemed pretty counterintuitive.” According to the Department of Economic Development, the press release was posted on their Facebook page, and its URL was linked from a Phoenix Business Journal listing. The university and town officials were in town promoting the event, but told students and town officials the earthquake was the reason for the cancellations. The head of the economic development department said he didn’t know about the press release until it went out. “It’s a safety issue. The real message was probably conveyed in the first press release,” the department director said. “The real news was that the event was canceled due to the earthquake. They didn’t really want to admit that.” Mesa State spokesman Chris Brady said a study was being conducted by the college’s Office of Institutional Research and Evaluation to determine the effect the release had on the college. Brady said officials were gathering information and talking to students and town officials.

“The marketing department is
