We start by looking at the ‘magic box’, the sample size and what can be done with it. In November 2016, the Manchester City Football Club scanned 91 real-life football players while they were playing matches. These matches were all recorded with high-end, cameras which used motion capture sensors. The video above shows some of those games in action, it was made using the technique and game performance data collected by the Manchester City Football Club. From the 91 players, the Manchester City Football Club was able to collect the full body position data for 70 players. Eddie Dejak on what’s possible with the technique. “FIFA 22 will use the full body data of those 70 players. For example, it will be able to detect not only the body position but also when someone kicks the ball,” says Eddie Dejak, Head of Programming of Visual FIFA on the Xbox Game Pass, Microsoft Studios. Although the game will use this data, it will be used in different ways. “With motion capture, the player models are the base for the AI behavior,” says Dejak. “This means that if you know the player is standing at a certain position, it can use this information to determine how to move the player.” For example, it can tell when the player is about to dive or tackle, and adjust his movement accordingly. According to Dejak, because these positions are tracked from high-speed cameras, the systems are able to detect whether a player is on the ground or running, for example. The system can measure the distance between the players and determine the speed of the players. Dejak, though, did not go into the matter of the data not being usable. “The data is not fully usable,” he says. “We cannot use the positions to control the animations. The only thing we can do with it is to use it to make the player move in certain ways.” While the City Football Club has not released the data to the public, Dejak does not think that this is a hindrance. “[The data] is very interesting data,” he says. “Not everyone would be able to get this data and use it in a game. But Manchester City has got this data. So all we can do with that sports video game in the world. EA SPORTS game of the year multiple award winner. How does it work? FIFA triggers the exact moment a player makes a decision, i.e. a dribble, passes or shoots. This decision is made when the player is in the camera location of the player in question. This camera location is in control of the game engine and cannot be influenced by the player in any way. It is simply a function of the physics engine, which determines how fast a player can run at any moment. This camera location is therefore, the key element of FIFA's gameplay engine, it is the source of gameplay and the main element of the game. The engine is based on the "game as it should be" paradigm. FreeKick is a soccer specific fun mode in FIFA, which allows you to throw and catch 'tactical balls'. You have the ball at your feet and can feel the difference between your accurate and less accurate throws. Choose from the best soccer players, including Cristiano Ronaldo, Zlatan Ibrahimovic, Lionel Messi and the real German internationals like Mesut Ozil. Players from around the world are available, including European leagues, from as far back as the 1930s. Features include the ability to create your own custom gameplay, a 'professional' mode with commentary, free online play and much more. Who is behind FreeKick? FreeKick has been designed by EALA, the leaders in video game development. EALA was born in 1999, from a team of established game developers. EALA was founded by Rami Aizet, the same developer that originally created Pro Evo Soccer for Sony Computer Entertainment. This game features the authentic feeling gameplay engine developed by EA Sports, Pro Evo Soccer. Pro Evo Soccer was released on PlayStation One and PC in 1999. It is the only soccer video game to ever receive the "European Game of the Year" award. Since 2002, Pro Evo Soccer has remained the best selling soccer game in Europe. bc9d6d6daa
