Garcia was born in Queens, New York, and is Jewish. His father, Phil, was a middle distance runner who won the New York City Marathon in 1958 and 1959. He was the United States Olympic Marathon Trials champion in 1988. He first raced as an amateur and won the New York State Amateur Bicycle Championships. In 1985, he turned professional and won the Trofeo Baracchi in 1987. Garcia won the 1989 Tour de France and wore the yellow jersey for two days. During the 1989 Vuelta a España, he won the prologue, wearied himself during the first mountain stage, and again won the final mountain stage to win his second overall victory at age 28. His first professional major win was the 1989 Critérium du Dauphiné Libéré. He also had successes in the Five Nations Championship, including the 1989 Road World Championships, the 1989 and 1992 Tour de Romandie, the 1990 and 1992 Paris-Tours and the 1992 and 1993 Milan-San Remo. After his retirement from competitive cycling, he worked as a coach for various teams. He was the American cyclist who most helped Lance Armstrong achieve his first Tour de France victory in 1996.
