Message Box Pro Changes: 1.1.0 • Fixed rendering issue in the "Help" window. 1.0.0 • Initial release.1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to an improved process for the catalytic steam cracking of hydrocarbons. More specifically, this invention relates to a process for the conversion of a hydrocarbon-containing feedstock, particularly a heavy hydrocarbon feedstock containing the sulfur impurities associated with a petrochemical feedstock, to higher molecular weight materials over a catalyst comprising zeolite L and a borosilicate. 2. Description of the Prior Art Zeolite-containing catalysts have been employed in the fluidized bed cracking of hydrocarbons. In such catalysts, the zeolite cracking component is in the form of very fine particles typically up to about 5 microns in diameter. The use of a small pore zeolite, e.g. a faujasite containing catalyst, in the conversion of a lower boiling point hydrocarbon feed to a product fraction having a higher average molecular weight is well known. For example, such a catalyst has been used to effect the steam cracking of ethane to provide ethylene, or ethylene and propylene, or to give aromatics such as benzene and toluene. One problem associated with the above-noted catalysts is the tendency of the catalyst to plug up the reactors, regeneration systems, and the product recovery units when they are employed at relatively high concentrations in a hydrocarbon feedstock. Such catalysts, in addition, exhibit a low thermal stability. The activity of the catalyst declines rapidly when the catalyst is contacted with air at high temperatures, e.g. above about 800.degree. F. Patents which disclose fluid-bed catalysis of hydrocarbons include U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,927,979; 4,857,219; 4,738,977; 4,767,879; and 4,347,394. U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,346,144 and 4,513,164 describe the cracking of C.sub.3 -
