domestic dispute this weekend. A 911 call was made about 2:30 a.m. Sunday at the woman's home on the 100 block of Rose Hill Drive. While responding officers from the Tampa Police Department found the victim lying on the ground with a golf club in her back, police said. The victim was taken to Florida Hospital with cuts and a broken rib, said Tampa police spokeswoman Andrea Davis. The woman's name is not being released. When officers confronted the woman's boyfriend, who had arrived at the home while the woman was being assaulted, she told officers that "he had been beating her with a golf club," Davis said. The boyfriend admitted he had been drinking and was arrested on domestic battery and other charges. Police didn't know where the club came from, but believe it was the girlfriend's. When investigators looked up the girlfriend's license plate, they noticed that the car was being driven by an off-duty Hillsborough police officer, said police spokesman Mike Bandish. When Hillsborough officers arrived at the home, they found the woman with the golf club in her back. When one of the officers asked her what happened, she told him that her boyfriend was "beating her with a golf club," Bandish said. The officer asked her what she was going to do next, and she told the officer she was going to "get him" with the golf club. "He told her that she needed to go to the hospital," Bandish said. "He was concerned that she might have a concussion." The Tampa officers who responded to the 911 call took custody of the Golf Club -- a Taylor Made 2 Oak Street Golf Club -- which was found on the front lawn. The off-duty Hillsborough

"Contemplative mode of thought": Attention allocation and identity regulation in undergraduate psychology. This study examines the attention allocation and identity regulation strategies in undergraduate psychology students during a semester-long teaching activity. The 1-hour teaching session is cast as a dialogues with past and present psychology educators. Teachers discuss the challenges and rewards of teaching with students and their personal preoccupations with psychology education and their professional identity development. Previously unnoticed attentional strategies were identified in the transcripts. Specifically, teachers focus comments and mentoring practices on subtle qualities of attention, such as presence, attentiveness to needs, and attentiveness to body-based signals. Students respond to these quality attentional signals, engaging in identity regulation processes that are completed in different contexts. This attentional sampling serves as a heuristic for social identity formation in psychology education.Q: Adding or updating to a database from ASP.NET MVC I'd like to know how to add or update data from a model to a database from within an ASP.NET MVC application. I've got a db up and running in Visual Studio. I've got a'model' that has (amongst other things) a 'table' with various data in it.

The model is referenced by an ASP.NET MVC controller and I need to do something like add a new user to the model and then query the db and check if the user exists and update the table, if it exists, if it doesn't then add it. Is this possible and how? Many thanks A: The basics would be something like this public class MVC { public void AddUser(string userName, string password) { // add to whatever database you have setup for users using (SqlConnection con = new SqlConnection("...")) { using (SqlCommand cmd = new SqlCommand("INSERT INTO UserTable (Name, Password) VALUES (@userName, @password)", con)) { cmd.CommandType = CommandType.Text; cmd.Parameters.AddWithValue("@userName", userName); cmd.Parameters.Add
