

"We've worked extremely hard to create a new generation of FIFA gameplay," said David Rutter, Executive Producer of FIFA. "The new HyperMotion Technology allows us to collect a huge amount of data about what players do on the pitch, and use it to create an incredible experience for the player." I know, its shameless self promotion. Still I must say this is what all developers really want to do and this is what they have been doing for all those years. They need the sales, and that's what they will do to gain them. That doesn't change the fact that it is very sad to see a game that was supposed to be a masterpiece, so unique, so different being dragged down with poor reviews and sales. Some guys want to make it without worrying about letting success pass them by and they want to take a step away from being slaves to their plans. I'm happy for them, even if it's just one step at a time. I've been a gamer since the Legend of Zelda for the NES. The experience of sitting down for the first time, trading your soul for a game of Zelda after all the anticipation was finally over, I'll never forget that as long as I live. And when I played it a few days ago after getting it a week ago, I really felt that I was back in the world of Zelda. I enjoyed it that much, not simply because it was like walking back to the past, but I was also able to relive it. I also enjoyed it because of that little push I got, and because I got to go through a few new things... of course, I had played LoZ many times before, but I got to go through it as a different player. And this is what I am talking about. That little push that I got the first time I sat down to play LoZ gave me this... and it doesn't have to be an RPG. I wish every game I played got to give me this. I also hate the fact that the review I just read said that he played the game with a controller. That means that he got that little push because of the AI only, not because of his skills. I'm sorry, but I didn't really care how good the graphics were, I just want to play a game with normal controls, even if I am not used to them.
